Tory can’t win election without winning England. And he’s getting close.

SUNDAY TIMES

POLL

The Tories and Labour are neck and neck in the polls, with the Conservatives just one point ahead in a YouGov survey. The poll, conducted on Friday, found that 40% of people would vote for the Conservatives, compared to 39% for Labour. The Liberal Democrats are in third place with 15% of the vote.

The poll also found that the Tories are leading on a number of key issues, including the economy and immigration. The Conservatives have a lead of 10 points on the economy, and 11 points on immigration.

The figures are a significant improvement for the Tories, who have struggled to win over voters in recent months. The party has been in power for 10 years, but has seen its support fall to record lows in the wake of the Brexit vote.

Camilla Tominey writes:

"The Tories are getting closer to winning the general election, but they still need to do more to convince voters that they are the best choice for the country. The party has made significant strides in recent weeks, with a number of key developments that have helped to boost its standing.

The Conservatives have been able to draw attention to their achievements in office, including their handling of the economy and their commitment to Brexit. The party has also been able to highlight its opposition to Labour’s policies on immigration and welfare.

However, the Tories still need to do more to convince voters that they are the best choice for the country. The party has a long way to go in terms of winning over the public, and will need to continue to focus on delivering on its promises if it is to secure a convincing victory in the general election.

It is clear that the Tories are getting closer to winning the general election, but they still need to do more to convince voters that they are the best choice for the country. The party has made significant strides in recent weeks, with a number of key developments that have helped to boost its standing. However, the Tories still need to do more to convince voters that they are the best choice for the country. The party has a long way to go in terms of winning over the public, and will need to continue to focus on delivering on its promises if it is to secure a convincing victory in the general election."