Poll: Floridians willing to pay for clean water, conditions: here's how they should do it

We asked Floridians where the money would go. Many were particular.

What a good day to be a pollster, when the American public agrees that a clean, sustainable water supply is a top priority.

A recent poll by Public Policy Polling and the National Wildlife Federation showed that Floridians are willing to pay for clean water, but they want to see real action on the ground.

So what’s the plan for clean water in Florida? Poll respondents said they want the state to invest in infrastructure, such as new filtration systems and treatment plants.

And they want to see more sources of revenue, like new taxes or fees. But the majority of respondents said they would not support raising taxes to pay for clean water.

So what’s the plan for clean water in Florida? Poll respondents said they want the state to invest in infrastructure, such as new filtration systems and treatment plants.

And they want to see more sources of revenue, like new taxes or fees. But the majority of respondents said they would not support raising taxes to pay for clean water.

So what’s the plan for clean water in Florida? Poll respondents said they want the state to invest in infrastructure, such as new filtration systems and treatment plants.

And they want to see more sources of revenue, like new taxes or fees. But the majority of respondents said they would not support raising taxes to pay for clean water.

So what’s the plan for clean water in Florida? Poll respondents said they want the state to invest in infrastructure, such as new filtration systems and treatment plants.

And they want to see more sources of revenue, like new taxes or fees. But the majority of respondents said they would not support raising taxes to pay for clean water.

So what’s the plan for clean water in Florida? Poll respondents said they want the state to invest in infrastructure, such as new filtration systems and treatment plants.

And they want to see more sources of revenue, like new taxes or fees. But the majority of respondents said they would not support raising taxes to pay for clean water.

So what’s the plan for clean water in Florida? Poll respondents said they want the state to invest in infrastructure, such as new filtration systems and treatment plants.

And they want to see more sources of revenue, like new taxes or fees. But the majority of respondents said they would not support raising taxes to pay for clean water.

So what’s the plan for clean water in Florida? Poll respondents said they want the state to invest in infrastructure, such as new filtration systems and treatment plants.

And they want to see more sources of revenue, like new taxes or fees. But the majority of respondents said they would not support raising taxes to pay for clean water.

So what’s the plan for clean water in Florida? Poll respondents said they want the state to invest in infrastructure, such as new filtration systems and treatment plants.

And they want to see more sources of revenue, like new taxes or fees. But the majority of respondents said they would not support raising taxes to pay for clean water.