The Villages, the world’s largest retirement community and home to more than 100,000 residents, has become a key player in Florida’s political landscape. With the 2024 presidential election just around the corner, the influence of the Villages is expected to be even greater as the state becomes a crucial battleground for both the Republican and Democratic parties.

In 2020, during the last presidential election, the Villages became a political battleground as both candidates vied for the loyalty of the community’s residents. According to a report by the Associated Press, Donald Trump carried the Villages by a margin of just 10 votes.

In the upcoming election, the Villages could be even more pivotal. With the community’s population reaching nearly 110,000, it represents one of the largest voting blocs in the state. According to a report by the Miami Herald, the Villages has more registered voters than any other city in Florida.

This makes the Villages a key battleground in the 2024 Republican primary, where candidates are scrambling to win the support of the community’s residents. Trump, who is expected to announce his candidacy in the near future, is expected to have a strong base in the Villages.

DeSantis, on the other hand, also has a strong following in the community. In 2018, he won re-election with 80% of the vote in the Villages. According to a report by the Orlando Sentinel, DeSantis is expected to campaign heavily in the community, hoping to solidify his support there.

But the Villages is not a monolith. While the community is predominantly Republican, there is a significant number of Democratic and independent voters as well. According to a report by the Bradenton Herald, the Villages has a strong progressive wing, and many of the community’s residents are active in local political groups.

For the Villages, the upcoming election is an opportunity to flex its political muscle and influence the outcome of the 2024 presidential race. But it will not be an easy task. Trump and DeSantis are both powerful forces in the community, and they will not go down without a fight.

The Villages is likely to be a key battleground in the 2024 Republican primary, with candidates vying for the support of the community’s residents. Trump, with his strong base in the Villages, is expected to have the advantage. But DeSantis, with his strong following and deep roots in the community, will not go down without a fight.

The Villages is a critical battleground in the 2024 Republican primary, and the candidates who win there will have a strong advantage in the presidential race. But the outcome of the Villages is far from certain, and the community’s residents are likely to be a deciding factor in the 2024 presidential election.
