Rates should stay the same for the foreseeable future with slight volatility.

11% say rates will go up

Joel Naroff

Up. Look for a good employment report.

22% say rates will go down

Jeff Lazerson
President, MortgageGrader

Down. With inflation pressures in mind—it doesn’t really make any sense to me but rates are drifting down.

Les Parker

67% say unchanged

Ken H. Johnson
Real estate economist, Florida Atlantic University
Long-term mortgage rates will remain virtually unchanged. 10-year Treasury yields have been remarkably stable for the last two weeks holding between 1.50 percent and 1.675 percent. This stability should translate into minimal movement in long-term mortgage rates. Mortgage rates should remain virtually unchanged this week holding near historic lows.

Unchanged.

Trend: Flat. Markets are confused and bouncy. Confusion stems from lack of consensus as to whether we are about to have significant inflation vs. those who believe the Fed's view that inflation will be transitory. For the next few weeks attention will be focused on how much more debt the administration and Congress decide to take on. The bigger the increase in the debt ceiling the bigger the hit to rates will be.

Gordon Miller

Despite comments from Treasury secretary Yellen regarding the possibility of rate hikes this year, the likelihood of near term increases remains low. Rates should stay the same for the foreseeable future with slight volatility.

Mitch Ohlbaum
Mortgage banker, Macoy Capital Partners, Los Angeles, CA

Unchanged. The 10-year is trading at 1.60 percent today but has been in a narrow range for the last few weeks. Treasurys were poised to rise but were pared by the reporting of new jobs by ADP, which fell short of estimates. The Fed and the market have been talking about inflation and I don’t think anyone believes the recent increase is anything more than a momentary blip on the inflation radar.

Logan Mohtashami
Housing analyst, HousingWire, Irvine, California

Unchanged. No matter how good the economic data has been, the bond market refuses to go in any direction for the time being. Jobs Friday is coming up, and the jobs data is about to make an epic run to get all the jobs lost to COVID-19. So, not much is going on in the bond market, and the stock market refuses to have a 10 percent correction. So for now, keep a close eye when the 10-year yield gets 1.75 percent or 1.55 percent.
