New Year’s optimism has money flowing away from bonds and toward riskier assets.

64% say rates will go up

Gordon Miller
Owner, Miller Lending Group, LLC, Cary, North Carolina

The market seems to be setting up for the possibility of a strong employment number this Friday and faster action by the Fed to raise rates. So while rates may edge higher this week keep in mind the market has been wrong quite frequently in guessing Fed action, inflation concerns and COVID so expect any sudden increases to calm down and volatility to continue throughout 2022.

Ken H. Johnson
Real estate economist, Florida Atlantic University

As long anticipated, 10-year Treasury notes are moving up. This will lead to a rise in mortgage rates eventually. What can slow down this rise in rates? More COVID uncertainty or another large stimulus package injected into the economy could both serve to increase the demand and lower yields for 10-year Treasury notes. However, this seems unlikely at this point. Long-term mortgage rates will rise again in the coming week.

Trend: Higher. Markets have started the year with an Alfred E. Neuman, "what, me worry?" investment strategy sending money into equities rather than fixed income resulting in higher rates. Give this another few days.

Higher.

Higher... boom shaka-laka laka boom shaka laka (quote from Sly Stone).

Greg McBride
Vote: Up. New Year’s optimism has money flowing away from bonds and toward riskier assets, pushing yields and mortgage rates higher to start 2022.

Up. Treasurys rose from 1.50 percent at the end of 2021 and Tuesday hit 1.71 percent before closing before dropping back to 1.67 percent today. That is the fastest rise for a new year we have seen in 20 years. Many believe the market has already factored expected rises from the Fed. Inflation will slow and the economy is expected to remain strong.

Mortgage rates go down. Here's a parody based on Taylor Swift's 2014 hit "Bad Blood." “The curve's got problems; And bonds don't think Jay can solve them; He made a really deep cut; And short-end and long got bad blood." The battle for dominance in the Treasury curve continues while mortgages relish the bad blood. So despite the trend to higher rates, expect some surprises in the market that help rates drop.

Down. COVID is causing economic havoc.

Lower. Here we are again with the 10-year yield at 1.65 percent; we have tried many times to test the high levels of last year, around 1.75 percent, with no luck. Jobs Friday is coming up, the ADP number came in at a massive beat, but bond yields didn't budge much. Make sure to keep an eye out for the closing yields of Friday. If a good jobs report doesn't push us above 1.75 percent, bonds can rally, and yields could fall a tad.
The new year has started with bonds selling off at a fairly quick pace. This has resulted in the highest mortgage rates in 9 months. I think bonds will consolidate from here and rates will pause for a short while. So mortgage rates will be flat in the coming week.

About the author

Zach Wichter is a mortgage reporter at Bankrate. He previously worked on the Business desk at The New York Times where he won a Loeb Award for breaking news, and covered aviation for The Points Guy. He also worked in production on Dateline NBC and wrote anchor copy for New York 1. He graduated from Northwestern University with a Bachelor’s degree in Journalism in 2013. As president of his co-op board in Queens (it’s like a condo board, but more New York-y), Zach is constantly thinking about real estate and dealing with issues of homeownership, HOA-style house rules and mortgage eligibility.

Highlights

Wichter came to the mortgage beat at the height of the COVID-19 pandemic, when home financing and the real estate industries were rare bright spots in an otherwise sluggish economy. He got to work looking under the hood of trends in the headlines, and by analyzing address forwarding data from the U.S. Postal Service, learned that the pandemic wasn't the end of cities after all. He also focuses on racial equity issues in the housing market.

Experience
Although Bankrate is the first place Wichter has covered the mortgage and real estate verticals full-time, he's an experienced business reporter with a broad range of experience. In addition to covering aviation at The Times, he had a weekly column that highlighted commercial real estate transactions in New York City, and covered all kinds of stories as a general assignment business reporter.
