Another week of Treasurys moving up, another week of rising mortgage rates.

Higher: Inflation not coming down yet.

Up.

Treasurys and the bonds that back mortgages have rallied to start the last week of April. This has pushed mortgage rates slightly lower. In the past we have seen these rallies only last a couple days despite the hope that mortgage rates would be topping off or at least consolidate at this level for a while. I hesitate to think this is a near-term top in mortgage rates, and believe it is simply end-of-month positioning by fund managers. I think rates will resume their upward climb in the coming week.

Rates – higher. This week we get another read on inflation, and it is hard to imagine there will be any improvement. Rates could move higher on the news.

33% say rates will go down

Ken H. Johnson
Real estate economist, Florida Atlantic University

Shakiness in the equity markets is driving capital into the bond markets. This is causing yields to decline in bonds. 10-year Treasury notes are no exception. Thus, lower yields in 10-year Treasurys will lead to lower mortgage rates. Long-term mortgage rates should decline slightly next week.

Mortgage rates go down. Here's a parody based on "Faster" by George Harrison from 1979. "Faster than a bullet from a gun, are bulls faster than everyone? Who's the master of going faster?" The bears roared and zoomed as they moved rates up 1.5 percent in 60 days. Can the bulls return the favor by dropping rates faster than they rose over the next 60 days? Probably not, but they can reverse half of the rise.

Down. Good news for today's home buyers - mortgage rates peaked.

22% say unchanged

Trend: Flat. Uncertainty rules and improvements in yields may only be corrections to a massively oversold market. There is no sign that inflation is abating and the longer term trend is still to higher yields on debt.

Vote: Unchanged. Finally a bit of a breather after the mega-move in mortgage rates, especially since the beginning of March. Depending on what the Fed says at next week’s meeting, this breather may prove to be short-lived.

About the author

Zach Wichter is a mortgage reporter at Bankrate. He previously worked on the Business desk at The New York Times where he won a Loeb Award for breaking news, and covered aviation for The Points Guy. He also worked in production on Dateline NBC and wrote anchor copy for New York 1. He graduated from Northwestern University with a Bachelor’s degree in Journalism in 2013. As president of his co-op board in Queens (it’s like a condo board, but more New York-y), Zach is constantly thinking about real estate and dealing with issues of homeownership, HOA-style house rules and mortgage eligibility.

Highlights

Wichter came to the mortgage beat at the height of the COVID-19 pandemic, when home financing and the real estate industries were rare bright spots in an otherwise sluggish economy. He got to work looking under the hood of trends in the headlines, and by analyzing address forwarding data from the U.S. Postal Service, learned that the pandemic wasn't the end of cities after all. He also focuses on racial equity issues in the housing market.

Experience

Although Bankrate is the first place Wichter has covered the mortgage and real estate verticals full-time, he's an experienced business reporter with a broad range of experience. In addition to covering aviation at The Times, he had a weekly column that highlighted commercial real estate transactions in New York City, and covered all kinds of stories as a general assignment business reporter.
